

Dear City Council,

I do not think people should be allowed to raise chickens in Annapolis. Because in the article from the Capital It said, there have been complaints from constituents regarding poor conditions for chickens.

Some of the complaints concerned roosters crowing and poor living conditions for hens. My own own Personal opinion is for not having people raise chicken is no. Because chickens can attack or can stink.

Sincerely, Melanie Hernandez

Dear city council

I disagree

I do not think people should be allowed to raise chickens in Annapolis because in the the article from the capital it said a predator can come and kill the chicken. that can be a bad person. people can not have them.

sincerely

Christopher
Escobar

Dear City Council

I do not think that people should be allowed to raise chickens in Ann Arbor.

In the text it says she grew up around chickens in East Port and said that they were dirty and smell bad and I think that is true.

Sincerely Ashley DeKio

Dear city council

I disagree because it's going to be a bad space. Some countries have chickens but it is going to be dirty, for example, some people only want to grow their chickens bigger which makes the chickens sick. That can make the people sick too. To make chickens healthy they need to make chickens smaller and they have to put them on the farm.

Dear city council,

People should not have chickens because they are too loud and they are not house pets. They are farm animals and most people think chickens make too much noise and that they're annoying. And if someone that lives next to you doesn't like chickens and you got a chicken they might start fighting with you.

Sincerely, Briceida

Dear City Council,

I do not think people in Annapolis should be able to raise chickens in their backyard.

I think people should not be able to raise chickens in their backyard because, in an article I saw from the Capital, it said that chickens can get dirty and smell bad. I would not want to live next to a dirty chicken that smells bad. From my personal experience with animals and something I know is that any animal can bite and so could a chicken. And that's why I think people should not be able to raise chickens in Annapolis.

Sincerely,

Paige Franco

Dear City Council,

I think people shouldn't be able to raise chickens in Annapolis. Because if I were raising the chickens I wouldn't want a chicken in my backyard or stinking up my yard.

The capital also says that Hawks could scoop the hens up, it also says only a maximum of 5 hens per household

I think that is way to many hens for a family.

Sincerely,

Zameah

Dear City Council,

I do not think people should be allowed to raise chickens in Annapolis.

Don't get me wrong, I love animals. I think that the city of Annapolis is not safe for the chickens, for example, in the article from the Capital it said "The city has received complaints regarding chickens at nine addresses." That shows that people could have chickens and the chickens could be treated horribly by their owners to make them be quiet so their neighbors won't find out. The article also said "Some of the complaints concerned roosters crowing and poor living conditions for hens." Roosters are illegal to raise and that means people are selling roosters illegally.

