C. Update from the Mayor

Thank you all for being here this evening.

First, I would like to extend my sincerest thanks to Alderwoman Shaneka Henson for stepping up as Acting Mayor while I took my unexpected trip to visit with my mum in Australia.

I appreciated knowing the City was in good hands and I understand she took over the boat show and passed a few pieces of legislation while I was gone!

On my way over to the other side of the world, I stopped in San Francisco at the invitation of the National League of Cities for a quick 48-hour meeting with fellow mayors.

- We learned about ways cities are adapting in a changing world:
 - o Autonomous vehicles
 - o Green roof
 - o Bikes/scooters

The City of Annapolis also been invited to participate in a Mayors' Institute on City Design in Miami in November as well.

The institute is a leadership initiative of the National Endowment for the Arts in partnership with the U.S. Conference of Mayors.

Eight cities from across the country were chosen for this opportunity to learn more about transforming communities through design. This is the brainchild of former Charleston Mayor Joe Riley.

Last week, we hosted a team from the U.S. Conference of Mayors.

We all agreed that the best site for this technical workshop was the site that includes City Dock, Main Street, Hillman Garage and our flood mitigation project.

This workshop in Miami is a huge opportunity for the City to receive guidance from nationally acclaimed experts in design and development, all of which at no cost to city taxpayers.

They will help find solutions to our most critical planning and design challenges.

This is a tremendous opportunity for the City of Annapolis and I look forward to briefing both the members of the City Council, as well as our citizens.

These two visits with Mayors from throughout the country and their vision, along with the expertise advice we will receive from tomorrow and Wednesday's Urban Land Institute's Technical Advisory Panel, will help us achieve one of most important goals – stimulating the city's economy and determining the most appropriate course of action for City Dock.

I would like to thank the Historic Annapolis Foundation, Preservation Maryland, and National Trust for Historic Preservation for funding the ULI study.

Throughout the day tomorrow and Wednesday, a panel of experts from the world of architecture, transportation, preservation, and economic development will speak with stakeholders from across the city – including each ward, business and community leaders, environmental and public art advocates, tourism experts, and more.

Combine all of this recent expertise and analysis with the existing information from the City Dock Master Plan, the Cultural Resources Study, and feedback from our City Dock discussion this past summer, we will have an abundance of guidance to move forward with finally re-imaging our City Dock.

Again, I would like to thank Historic Annapolis Foundation, the U.S. Conference of Mayors, Mayors' Institute on City Design for their continued support and energy.
